

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Publishing the fifth volume of the Strathclyde Law Review would have been a difficult undertaking without the support of several persons. The Editorial Board would therefore like to thank Professor Douglas Brodie for ensuring that we had the necessary support all through the publication process. Ian Sinkins deserves our appreciation for putting together the initial works which birthed the present volume of the law review and for helping to set up a dedicated website for the Strathclyde Law Review.

We are grateful to Professor the Hon Lady Wolffe QC for contributing a foreword to this volume. Having the signature of such a distinguished figure is a mark of honour for all of us at Strathclyde Law Review. Our network of peer reviewers worked very hard to fulfil their various commitments to the law review. We appreciate their time and effort in reviewing manuscripts assigned to them. We would also like to thank Morag Crawford, Kirsty Doyle, Eve Lucas, and Gemma Verlaque for providing administrative support to the editorial board.

Over the last few months, members of the editorial board have worked in synergy to produce a volume that maintains our overarching goal of inspiring debate and discussion on important legal issues. We hope that this volume would therefore be a valuable source of legal knowledge for all interested readers.
